Encapsulation services referred to you by:

Hospital birth: Take with you a cooler and four large sealable bags (Ziploc type) for ice. The staff will have you sign a Placenta Release form. They will fill your bags with ice to surround the plastic placenta container (they provide). It is important that your placenta stays cold (not frozen).

Home birth: If you'd like to have a placenta blood print, it is important that your midwife NOT put your placenta onto an absorbent pad. Instead, please ask that she put the placenta into a bowl to inspect it before refrigerating (not freezing) in an airtight container.

Both: Please be sure to call/text when you are in labor. If I don't answer right away, leave a message and I'll respond soon (I don't take calls when driving). The typical turnaround time for processing your capsules is two to three days, depending on the time of day I can begin.

I look forward to meeting you!
